Your B304x Baker has no price on your website. Here is what fixing that costs.

You have made mirror frames in Addison for twenty years. Online, a buyer can't see what any of them cost, and a quote request goes to whichever inbox it lands in. If prices are hidden on purpose, to protect your dealers, that stays your call: the new store can show the public a full price, a "from" price or no price at all, while trade buyers log in to see theirs. Below: the store, the quotes and the email security, as one job.

mirrorupgrade.com, 3 November 2026. The B304x Baker page shows a shopper two boxes with no labels and an Add to Quote button. The same page tells Google the price is $0.00, and so do the other 89 products.

Since we spoke

After we met in October we looked at mirrorupgrade.com again, and this time at the domain and the email behind it too. Everything below was checked from the outside, the way a customer or a stranger on the internet sees you: first in September, and the main points again on 3 November.

Your store runs on Shopify, your mail on Microsoft 365 with a Proofpoint filter in front of it, your domain is registered at GoDaddy and its DNS records sit at HostGator. Five companies each hold a piece, and none of them checks the others' settings. In September, Google Safe Browsing, Sucuri and our own sweep of 24 pages found no malware on the site.

The three lines below start with the cheapest and fastest to fix.

01 Keep mirrorupgrade.com and its email yours

MU-1

$500
once, then $97 a month

What we found

Right now, anyone can send email that claims to be from @mirrorupgrade.com, and nothing tells Gmail or Outlook to refuse it. For a business that takes orders and sends invoices by email, that is the gap fake-invoice scams use. Two records cause it.

What we do

Check the domain renewal and lock it with you on our first call, in your GoDaddy account and your company's name. No charge for that.

Replace the two SPF records with one correct record, and publish DMARC: two weeks of reports first, so no real mail gets blocked, then a policy that rejects fakes.

The domain publishes two SPF records, the list that tells other mail servers who may send as you:

v=spf1 a mx
include:websitewelcome.com include:outlook.com ~all

v=spf1 a:dispatch-us.ppe-hosted.com
include:spf.protection.outlook.co m -all

The rules allow one. A receiving server that finds two treats the check as an error, so neither record counts. The first one still names websitewelcome.com, HostGator's old web hosting.

There is no DMARC record. DMARC tells Gmail and Outlook what to do with mail that claims to be from @mirrorupgrade.com but isn't. Without it, a fake invoice from "order@mirrorupgrade.com" has nothing telling the receiver to reject it.

The domain, registered since 2010 and now at GoDaddy, comes up for renewal on 19 November. The registry shows a change last November, which looks like last year's renewal, so auto-renew may well be on. Worth two minutes in your GoDaddy account to be sure. If it lapsed, the store and email would stop within days.

What is in good shape: the site's certificate is valid to December and renews itself, it sends the right security headers, and the signing keys Microsoft 365 needs (DKIM) are published.

Run a full outside security check of your email, website, encryption and DNS (69 checks). We fix what it finds and check again.

Every month after: a fresh scan, and an email from us if anything changed.

02 Put a price on the B304x, and the other 89

MU-2

$4,000
once

What we found

All 90 products carry a price of $0.00. Shoppers see no price; Google sees $0.00, which keeps every product out of Google Shopping and breaks the price in your product markup.

The Request for Quote page shows the raw code `{rfq_content}` to visitors, and to Google's crawler.

On a phone the homepage took 10.4 seconds to show its main image (Lighthouse, September). The theme dates from 2020.

36 collections exist; the homepage links to 13. Your style and color collections can only be found through the sitemap. No page has a description written for Google (products reuse their spec text), and "Addison" doesn't appear on the homepage or About page.

Tapping the email address in the footer opens the phone dialer, because it is coded as a phone link. In September the site said you open at 10 and Google said 9:30.

What we do

Rebuild the store on the Shopify account you already have, so your orders, customers and checkout carry straight over.

A size calculator on every frame: width and height in, price out, worked from your own price sheet. Minimum orders, cut fees and any other rule you quote by go in too.

You decide what the public sees: a full price, a "from" price, or none. Trade and wholesale prices sit behind a login you approve each buyer for. On your Shopify plan that needs a wholesale app; we pick it with you and show you its monthly fee before you agree.

A quote form that works for the jobs a calculator can't price: size, style, a photo of the mirror. It lands in line 03's inbox, not a mailbox.

Every product and collection written up for Google, with a real price, your address and your FAQ marked up, a product feed sent to Google Merchant Center, and your Google listing set to what you make.

You see the new store on a preview link and approve every page before it replaces the old one.

03 Give every quote one place to land

MU-3

$617
a month

What we found

Your site lists five ways in: a toll-free line, a local line, a fax, info@ and order@. Nothing ties them together, so a quote lives wherever it happened to arrive, and nobody is reminded when it goes quiet.

On Google you have one review, a five-star from four years ago, and you're filed as a contractor. For comparison, Barco Mirror & Glass, a mile away on Addison Road, has 25.

What we do

Station's customer system. Quote requests from the new store, website chat and email arrive in one inbox, on the web and on your phone. Each customer gets one record with every message, a stage (new, talking, booked, won, lost), a retail, commercial or wholesale tag, and notes your team can read.

We import your customer list and open quotes, write the follow-up messages in your words, and set up a login for everyone who answers quotes. No setup fee.

Is it worth $617 a month? That depends on how many quotes come in and what an order is worth. Bring rough numbers to the meeting and we'll work it out with you, line by line.

What's in it

Quote follow-up Pursuit · $247	Every quote that goes quiet gets a reminder in your words, until they answer or say no. Email by default; texts only to customers who have agreed to texts. You choose who it skips.
Store chat Greet · $79	A chat on the new store that asks for the size, the style and a phone number, and drops it in the inbox.
Google reviews Repute · $197	Asks each customer for a review after delivery, and drafts your replies.
Trade email Dispatch · $94	Email to your dealers and contractors: new styles, price changes.

When it happens

Before 19 Nov	Domain renewal checked and locked. One SPF record. DMARC switched on in report mode.
Week 1	Customer system set up. Your list imported, email routed, your team logged in. Free until the store launches.
Weeks 2 and 3	The new store on a preview link. You check every page and every price.
Week 4	The store switches over. Product feed to Google, listing corrected, security check finished.
Every month	A security re-scan, and the Station report: quotes in, quotes won, reviews.

What we need from you

Prices	Your price sheet, and the rules for trade and wholesale pricing.
One call	Twenty minutes with GoDaddy, HostGator and Microsoft 365 open. You sign in; we make the changes while you watch.
Shopify	A staff account for Station on your store.
Customers	Your customer list in any format, and any open quotes.
Photos	Finished installs you're proud of, full size.
People	Who answers quotes, so each of them gets a login.

	Total each month Month to month, no contract. Starts the day the new store goes live; the weeks before are free.	$714

$4,500 once, to build	$714 a month	$13,068 the first 12 months after launch, paid to Station

Paid to others. Your Shopify plan and apps (as now, plus the wholesale app for the trade login), the domain renewal at GoDaddy, Microsoft 365 and card fees.

Starting smaller. The store and the security work stand on their own: $4,500 to build and $97 a month, without the customer system. Add it later if you want it.

What security can promise. It lowers the risk and shortens the time to respond. Nobody can promise you won't be hacked, and we won't.

Yours to keep. The domain, the store, the customer list and every message stay yours. If you leave, you take all of it.

Changing your mind. Cancel the monthly items any time. The build is billed half to start and half at launch, after you've approved the preview.

Say yes, and the email fix starts this week

Line 01 starts the day you say yes. The store preview follows in week 2. Want something changed first? Tell us in the meeting, or reply to the email this came with, and we'll send a new version.

Station builds websites, customer systems and security for businesses of every size. Sites we've built are at station.solutions/portfolio.
